As the early morning sun hit the beautiful city of Tokyo, the Nobunaga Temple remains silent as sunlight passes through its paper walls. However, the beautiful atmosphere outside only masks the silent despair within the temple. For within the structure sits Ryou Bakura, a white haired boy wearing a black colored polo with black pants, holding a picture of his sister, Amane.

Then, an old man, dressed also in black enters the room. "I have some bad news sir" says the old man. However, Ryou remains silent, so he continues. "It seems your father is still missing in Egypt" Hearing this bad news, Ryou leaves the picture on the desk and speaks: "What do I do?" "I beg your pardon, sir?" "What do I do? My father is gone, my mother and sister are gone. I don't have any one else, what do I do now?" "Don't say that sir" "No, it's true. I don't have a reason for living anymore" as he said this, the old man remained silent. Then, Ryou noticed that the old man was hiding a scroll behind his back. "What's that?" he questioned. "It's nothing sir, just a letter from home" "Are you expecting anyone?" "Yes sir, I was told that one of my grand daughters will be arriving soon" "Why?" "Well she volunteered to take my place as caretaker of this temple" "Why? What's wrong?" "Well sir, I would still prefer to serve you, but now that I'm 73, she felt it as though I deserve a permanent break" "Permanent?" Yes, I'm retiring sir" "Oh well I'll be missing you" "Don't say that sir; I'll still be caretaker here, well, until she gets a hang of the ropes" "I guess... so, when will she be coming?" "She'll be here anytime now" "Then you better prepare a room" "Already finished, sir" "That was quick" "Thank you sir, if you need anything else I'll be in my quarters" "Thanks" "Your welcome, sir" The old caretaker bows and leaves the room, while Ryou sits on the couch clutching a bunch of white lilies as he mourns his family.

A few hours later, he hears a loud thudding sound echo through the hallways. Thinking of the old man he rushes towards his quarters and finds him lying motionless on the floor. He checks for a pulse but finds none so he quickly phones the telephone operator which dispatches an ambulance towards the temple. However, Ryou quickly carries the old man on his back and rushes out the temple, down the long flights of stone steps and meets the ambulance. Still hyped with adrenalin the paramedics calm Ryou down. Now calmed, he tells the paramedics what happened and soon Ryou accompanies the old caretaker as they rush him to the hospital.

Meanwhile just as the ambulance leaves, an unknown person carrying a large suitcase starts climbing the steps towards the temple.
