The Chargers could trade Philip Rivers, but they'd likely screw it up, too Mut 24 coins .

LaDainian Tomlinson says the Chargers should sell Philip Rivers. The Chargers are in rebuilding mode and should consider trading Philip Rivers instead of ruin his entire career. Is that realistic?

It's all very sensible at first glance. The Chargers are, again absolutely a disaster, having lost three games in agonizing way after blowing leads in the fourth quarter. Rivers isn't part of the problem. He's getting 68.8% of passes. He averages 7.8 yards per effort, has 1.110 yards, seven touchdowns, and only one interception.

The Chargers signed Rivers to a four-year extension of $83 million in the year, however his structure in the contract isn't prohibitive for trading him. The cap isn't set to exceed $22 million until the end of the year, so it's very easy for teams to be able to get rid of it after the year 2018.

Then again, the Chargers really have a need for every bit of support they are able to get ... which they're lacking after going through so many losses lately including the Bosa holdout and that entire threatening fans to leave the team by relocation. If they could get rid of Mike McCoy and make the right kind of moves in the offseasonperiod, they could be competitive in the near future, sooner than you imagine. But that's admittedly a huge leap of faith for the team that hasn't produced anything particularly impressive, in the field or off.

What is the reason Madden NFL 24 players supported the latest CBA despite its apparent problems

Madden NFL 24 athletes voted in favor of the collective bargaining initiative by the owners by just 1.019-959 votes buy madden 24 coins . About 500 Madden NFL 24 players did not take part in the vote. But, the CBA, which will go until 2030. was passed by the voting majority. It was a result I anticipated since the beginning but the margin is shocking.
