1 - Computing A Federal Exchange Fee Reviews

The accuracy of your credit report can significantly affect your financial future and can determine if you are approved for future credit. Proper and savvy use of credit as a financial tool is crucial.

The US Federal Trade Commission (FTC) reports that approximately 19% of all credit reports have some sort of error. About 25% of those errors were substantial enough to affect the overall credit score. Disputes can be filed, and corrections made, but an FTC study also indicates that approximately 70% of consumers do not fix all errors.

Errors can originate with any of the participants of the reporting process, either creditors, the bureaus themselves, or consumers. The most common errors involve identity and credit lines erroneously listed under an identity number. Identity errors can be a misspelling of names or an inaccurate address. Sometimes that happens due to poor handwriting or data entry. Another identity error can be caused by the inaccurate use of a maiden name after the name has been legally changed. Accounts that have been closed and still appear as open or past due or accounts that misstate credit amounts have the greatest impact on an overall score. Credit utilization, the amount of credit used compared to total amount of credit available, is a major factor in calculating a credit score.

Disputing credit report errors can become a tangled and time-consuming battle. It's smart to be proactive. There are some simple actions that savvy consumers can take to avoid errors and save themselves a headache.

Pay on Time

It seems easy. Pay your bills on time, as specified by the due date. It is the best and simplest way to efficiently manage your credit health.

Manage Your Use of Credit

This is referred to as Credit Utilization, and this calculation is approximately 30% of a credit score, the second highest factor. Consumers should know the status of their accounts and periodically confirm credit limits on open accounts.

Review Credit Reports from all Three Credit Bureaus

This will confirm the accuracy of identifying information. This action also confirms the status of all accounts, open or closed, as well as credit limits and utilization. This listing would warn the observer if there are accounts misreported either by unintentional error or identity theft. A common error found during review is old accounts reported as still active. In the event that credit is denied, the consumer is entitled to access their credit report at no charge.

Be Proactive Against Identity Theft

Proactive actions include collecting mail promptly and discarding it effectively, which might include shredding financial items. Stop junk mail by being removed from mailing lists. Consumers can register on the National Do Not Mail List to stop unsolicited mail.

Identity theft is a growing concern and a valid concern. If a consumer believes their information has been compromised, they can file a fraud alert with the credit reporting bureaus. If a consumer has evidence of identity theft, a police report should be filed to document the incidence. Contacting the credit bureaus with that police department allows the consumer to place a credit freeze at no charge. No credit account can be opened under that social security number while that freeze is in place.

2 - Credit Score Repair Corporations Affect Cash Associated

This is a term referring to the action taken to correct the state of a persons credit. Causes for the need for credit repair can include previous poor credit management, finding errors on a credit report, or the terrible effects of identity fraud.

Actions taken during the process of credit repair might be the improvement of financial behavior or filing disputes with credit bureaus. Depending on the severity of the case, professional legal and financial counsel should be retained to resolve the issue.

Individuals can contact creditors and credit bureaus directly to dispute credit errors for free. Each business might have its own process and guidelines so contact the business involved directly and ask for their specific dispute procedures.

Trying to dispute and resolve errors can be time-consuming and cumbersome. Many people find the experience too frustrating and turn to credit repair companies to resolve the issues. Credit repair companies usually charge a fee for their service. These fees differ depending on the state of residence and the type of service that is requested. Victims of identity theft often require these services due to the vast extent of repairs needed.

Be wary when choosing to hire a credit repair company. Reputable companies do not make outrageous claims, and they clearly explain the terms of the agreement. The Consumer Protection Act was signed in 1996. A part of that act was Credit Repair Organizations Act (CROA). CROA protects consumers rights by making it illegal for credit repair companies to misrepresent what they can do for customers. And it is illegal to charge customers before performing their services. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) enforces the CROA.

Under this enforcement, credit repair companies are required to:

- 1.Explain your legal rights in a written contract that details the services to be performed.
- 2.Elaborate your three-day right to cancel without any charge.
- 3.Tell how long to expect to get results as promised.
- 4.Inform the total cost to be paid.
- 5.Explain any guarantees.

If a credit repair company doesn't abide by promises made, consumers have options.

- 1.Sue the credit repair company in federal court for the amount up to actual losses or for whatever amount that was paid, whichever is more.
- 2.Seek punitive damages, a punishment.
- 3.Join other people in a class action lawsuit against the company

The FTC warns that not all credit repair companies are legitimate, even if they claim to be 'non-profit'. The FTC advises contacting your financial institution or local consumer protection agency as good sources of information and referrals.

If filing bankruptcy, laws require that you get credit counseling from a government-approved organization within six months before filing for bankruptcy. A list of these approved organizations is available at www.usdoj.gov/ust. This listing is managed by the U.S. Trustee Program.

Accurate information on your credit report and in your credit history, is a part of your credit history. Therefore, it will remain on your credit report for seven years.

3 - Crowdfunding Ideas Pitched To InventureX

Since 2012, InventureX has been at the forefront of helping startups and entrepreneurs take their businesses to the next level. The team at InventureX comes from the fast paced work of tech startups in LA and Silicon Valley. They combine their experiences with product launch and crowdfunding marketing to create one of the leading crowdfunding firms.

InventureX has helped raise over 20 million dollars for crowdfunders on platforms such as Kickstarter, Indiegogo, and others. They specialize in product launches of all kinds, both physical products and web based services such as mobile app ideas. Their mission is to help entrepreneurs overcome obstacles in their business and transform it into a profitable venture with the help of crowdfunding. Visit, InventureX reviews for more details.

Working with InventureX allows you to get expert help with the crowdfund marketing, branding, and promotion to get funded. Not every project will qualify for their services. InventureX works with entrepreneurs by creating a partnership and sharing in the success of the crowdfunding raise. This allows entrepreneurs to get the help they need now and help cover some of the startup costs.

InventureX reviews hundreds of product ideas each month and works with a select few. If your product is selected by InventureX then they will partner and begin work right away to build interest for your product, create a crowdfunding page, and manage all the launch and promotion to be successful.

Preparing to crowdfund is just as important as the crowdfund promotions itself. The InventureX crowdfunding team says that you need an idea, a plan, and a passion to get anything funded. Many InventureX clients have raised 50k, 100k, and even one million dollars or more with their help. Your own success depends on your product idea, but rest assured that InventureX crowdfunding services can help you reach your full potential.

Submit your idea for an InventureX review and see if crowdfunding is right for you. Due to the high number of crowdfunding ideas pitched to InventureX each week, not every idea will qualify for their crowdfunding program. Bring your idea and your passion to see if it makes sense to partner with InventureX today. Submit your idea online at <https://InventureX.com>.
