The pain pulsed through her intoxicated veins, her breath choked out from her heaving lungs. It hurt, she knew it was too much but she continued. Propelling her multiple legs faster, the claws tapping rapidly against the large sheets of metal flooring as she moved. She had to get away, something repeated the message over and over again within her panicked thoughts. But the problem was, get away from what? She had absolutely no idea, for her thoughts remained clouded and poisoned by images of blood, silhouettes clutching surgical instruments and the faint sound of screaming. She had no idea where the strange, spindly, elongated legs came from, or the fact that her vision was blurred slightly with pain. she didn't even recognise her surrounding area, all she knew was... She had to get away.....
