Fed up of seeing all these stupid suicidal poems up here.

I have a wrote a few in the past but have recently opened my eyes. Still proud of them however, I keep them to remember what I was once like.

Chapter 1 - Is It Raining?

1 - Is It Raining?

Is it raining?
Go check if it is raining.

If it isn't, I promise it will.
If it is, I cannot promise it will stop.
As droplets drop, they each form a drill.
Unto our memories they will all drop.
For each raindrop is every person's tear.
Whether filled with pain or filled with joy,
As these drops fall, we must all fear,
For our memories, these drops, will only destroy.

I cannot promise the rain will end
Only because there is still suffering now.
The tears of teens is one big trend.
And the tears of men, roll down my brow.
Should this rain ever end, of course
Would mean the end of humanity itself.
Crying an everlasting showering force,
Would be damaging to our own health.
So invest in an umbrella and save yourself
From the acidic emotion that is other's pain
Walk around with a smile, put pity on the shelf
Forget about the rest of the crap in world, get out, and live again.
